I was born in Hungary in 1946, just after the end of WW2. My parents and older sister, Elizabeth, (born in Poland before the war), had managed to survive the war years under false papers in Poland and then Hungary. Our whole family (over 100 people) had been killed in the war, because of discrimination on the basis of religion and race.

Luckily, my parents were able to arrange to migrate to Australia, only thanks to a wonderful Polish friend who promised and gave my father a job here. I always remember his generosity to my family, and Australia's willingness to accept us into this wonderful country.

I believe in two main principles of Courage to Care –

- Every act of caring or kindness is important.
- If I don't do it, then who will?
