I was born in Australia of Viennese parents who fled after Kristalnacht. Through their communal work, they instilled in me a great sense of social justice.

I have always been committed to human rights issues. When I heard of Courage to Care, I knew that I could put a lot of my energies into this very worthwhile program. I have been involved in many facets since the commencement in NSW in 1998.

I have endeavoured to involve the elders of indigenous communities to present their experiences to the school students. This links into our aims of social tolerance and combating racism and prejudice.

I am very proud to be actively associated with this wonderful program and it has given me much personal satisfaction.
