I was born in East London, South Africa in 1934 and was fortunate to have had a happy and uncomplicated childhood. After school I studied at Cape Town university, to become a primary school teacher.

I later met my husband Egon, a Holocaust survivor, who was born in Slovenja. In 1983 we emigrated as a family to Australia to get away from the oppressive unjust Apartheid political regime. We have lived very happily here with our four children and twelve beautiful grandchildren.

Always being involved in community work I have recently have joined Courage to Care, where Egon shares his experiences as a survivor to help children understand about the way people with courage, often at great peril to themselves, help those in need.

I am privileged to be part of this very worthy Courage to Care program,
