Head of Education

I was born in Tanganyika, East Africa. My parents escaped from Poland at the outbreak of the war and went to East Africa via Siberia. We arrived in Perth in 1950. I grew up in Perth and completed my first degree majoring in history and psychology at the University of Western Australia.

I began my career as a school teacher including three years of teaching in Pittsburgh, USA. Following further study I then switched to counselling and psychology on my return to Australia. As a senior counsellor working in the ACT I specialised in developing programs for children with special needs and behavioural difficulties. For the last 22 years I have worked as a psychologist in a high school in the eastern suburbs.

I am privileged to join the Courage to Care team and I'm very passionate about the message it conveys to young people today.
