

Susi Freeman
Volunteer
Workshop Leader

I was born in Vienna and was lucky to have been able to escape with my parents to Australia in 1939, just before the outbreak of the Second World War. Several members of our close family were not so fortunate and perished in the Holocaust.

I have spent all my life in Australia and love it. I have been successful in my career (I am a dermatologist). I have a husband, Ron Freeman also a volunteer, one son Jeremy and two lovely grandchildren, Michael and Caroline.

I have had a good life in Australia, but I will never forget that I could have easily been one of the six million Jews who perished.

I volunteer with Courage to Care, as I want to enlighten children that one person can make a difference, through telling the stories of those who were saved because others had the Courage to Care. I also want to help teach that one must stand up against discrimination and not be a bystander.