Volunteer Guide

I was born in Australia with family roots tracking back to Lithuania via South Africa. I live in Brisbane and am currently studying at university. Human rights and social justice have always been an important part of my life.

I was drawn to Courage to Care because I believe strongly in the part we as individuals can play to combat bullying and racism. I aim to provide further understanding surrounding the existence of prejudice and discrimination in daily interactions and how they can develop into something extreme and dangerous. Human beings, like sheep, tend to follow rather than lead. I believe Courage to Care helps to equip individuals with the knowledge and understanding to make their own choices and the consequences of standing by and doing nothing.

I am honored to have the opportunity to share the stories of the exceptional individuals who have risen above their circumstances to pursue what is right rather than what comes easily. I also hope to pay tribute to the people they have helped and the lives that they have touched through their selfless acts.
